Ask Habi “Who Missed
Chores?”

Roommates

Pain Point

Roommates want chores to be done without constant nagging or direct confrontation.

Interview Quote

"The only problem is sometimes some chores get left undone because one of us has chosen not to do it for a long while and as a result, we end up with either really dirty bathroom or a dirty shower."

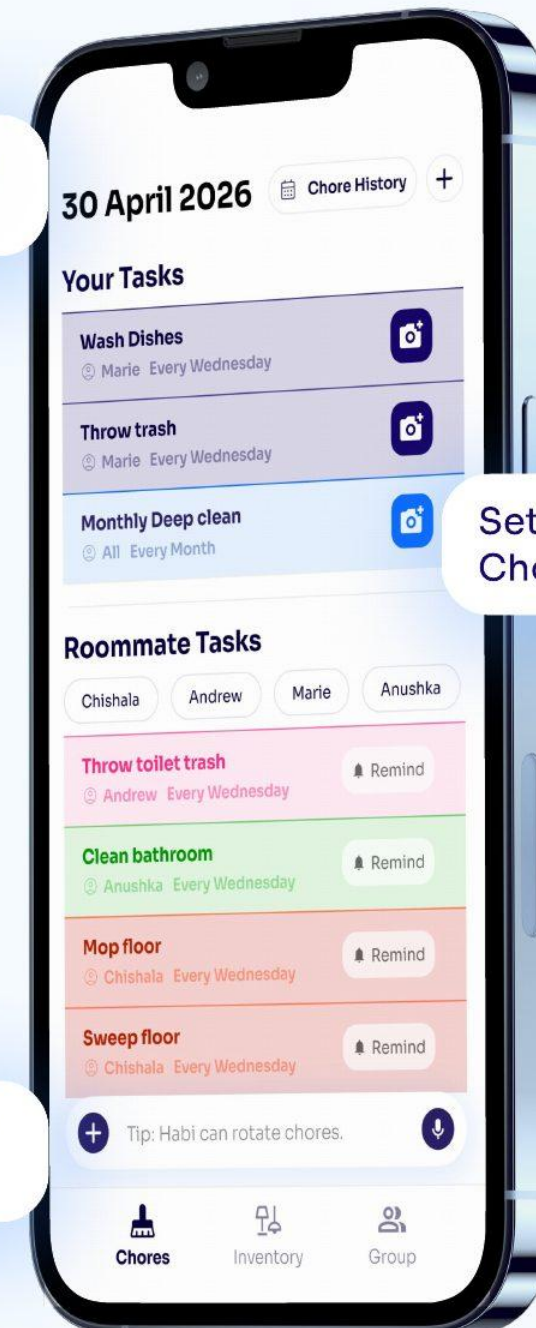

Solution

Chores laid out for each roommate, with nudges via automatic AI-powered smart notification or an optional manual button click. Complete a chore by taking before and after photos as real evidence.

Ask Habi "Who Missed
Chores?"

Pain Point

Roommates can't verify who did what, and when they completed it. This is typically communicated through verbal "have you done it yet?" or passive aggressive texts.

Interview Quote

"People will often not realize that their behaviors are issues until it's brought up directly to their face."

Solution

A chore history to view the before and after photos, real proof is shown for all roommates to see. Evidence can also be shown when escalated to Room Assistants.

AI x UI

AI can do Automations that would have more manual friction.

UI is static but gives users conceptual models/ visual cues.

Static UI Informs AI = Less Hallucinations

AI is dynamic, but current chat models begin with a blank screen too open ended for users.

RA Escalation

Add RA's temporarily, so that they can view problems in the shared app.

Pain Point

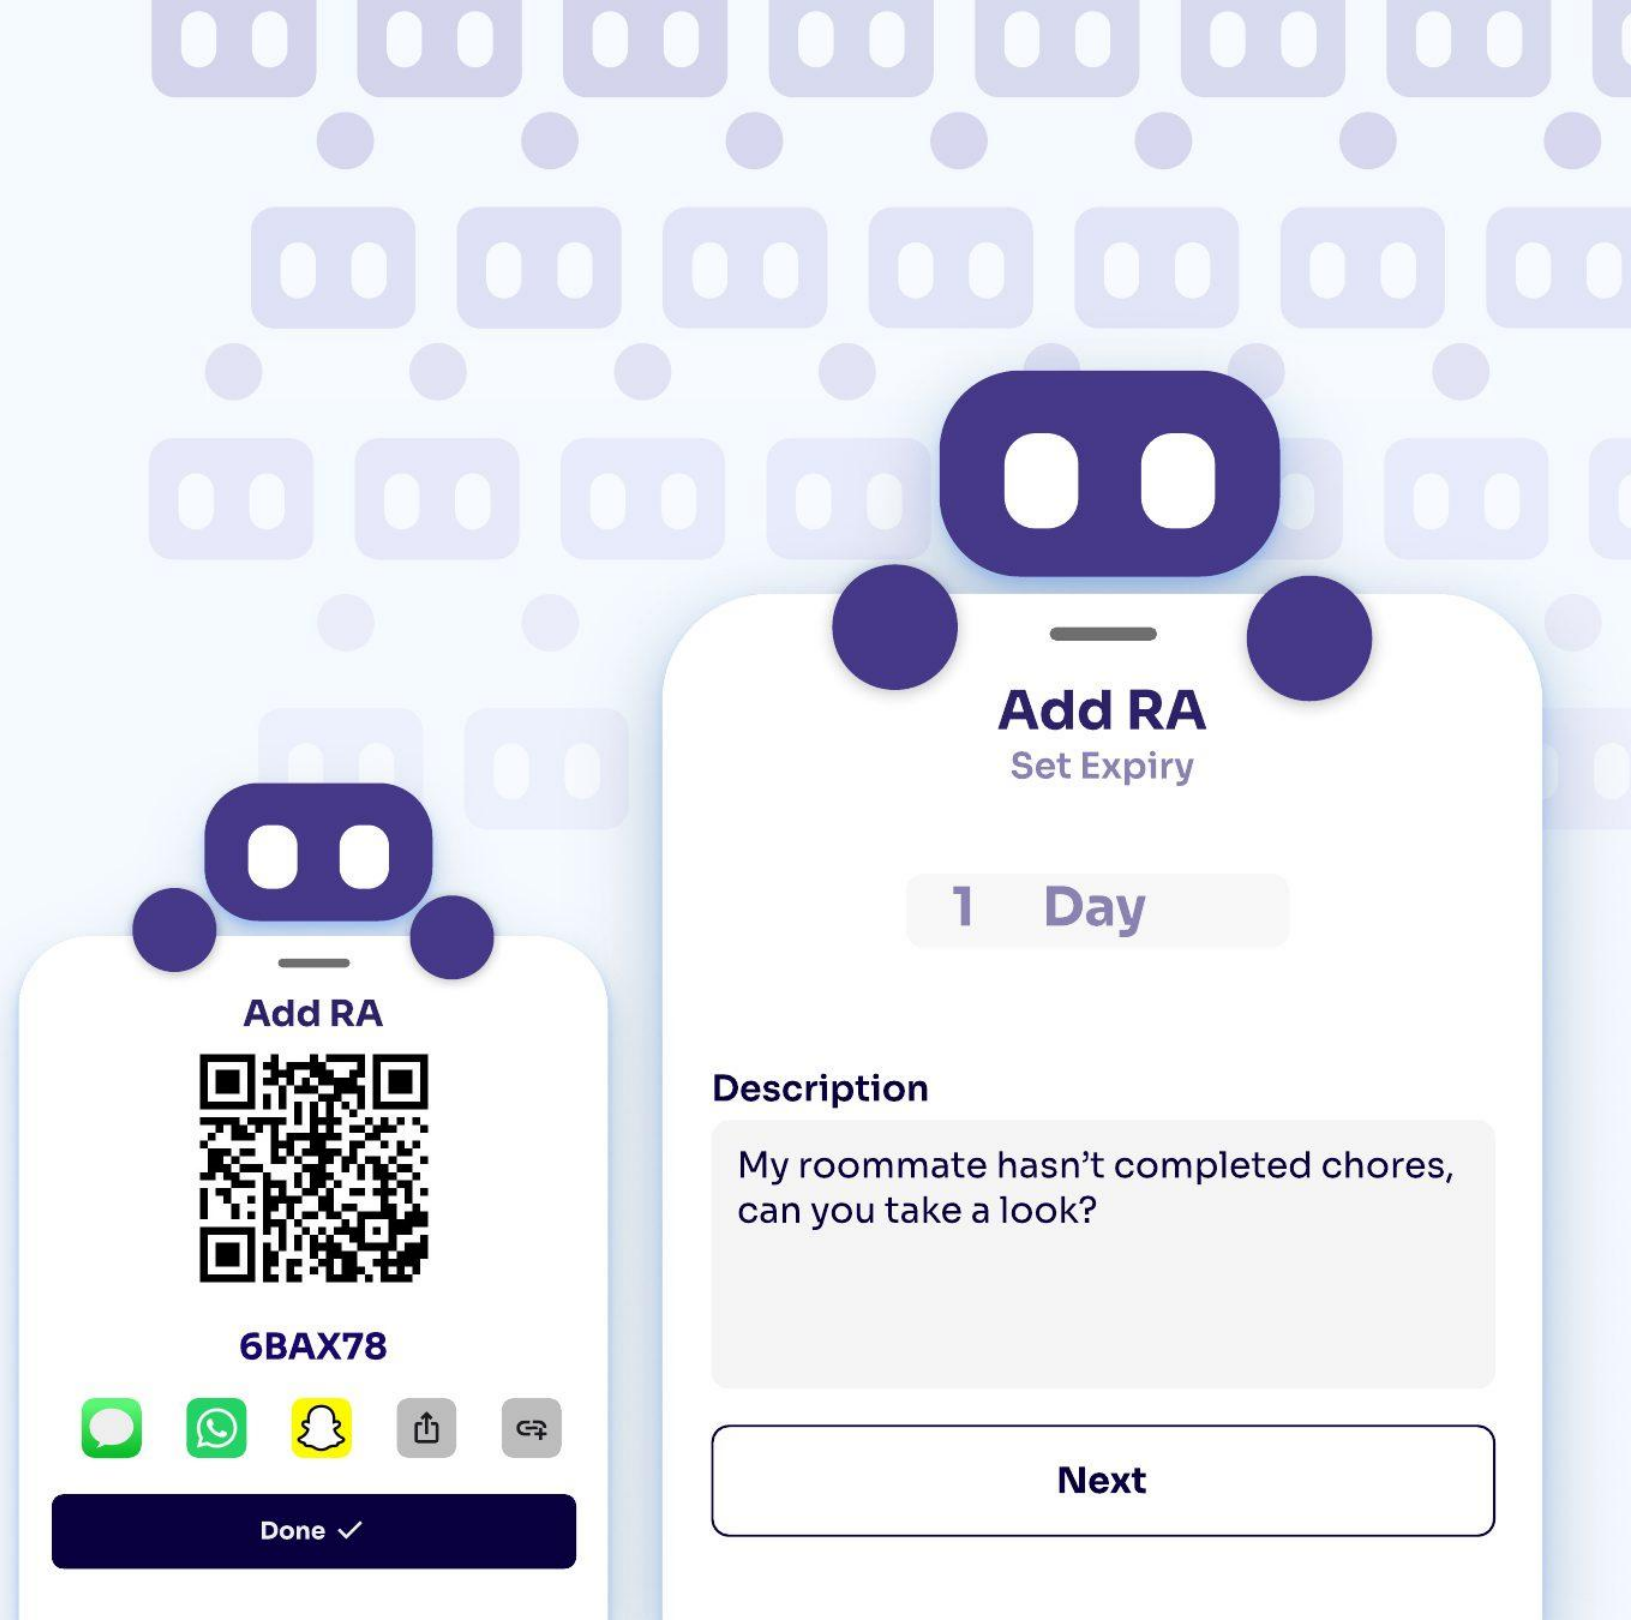

Roommates hesitate to escalate issues in fear of causing more problems.

Interview Quote

"I feel awkward going to the RA because it feels like I'm tattling. I'm worried it will make things worse between us."

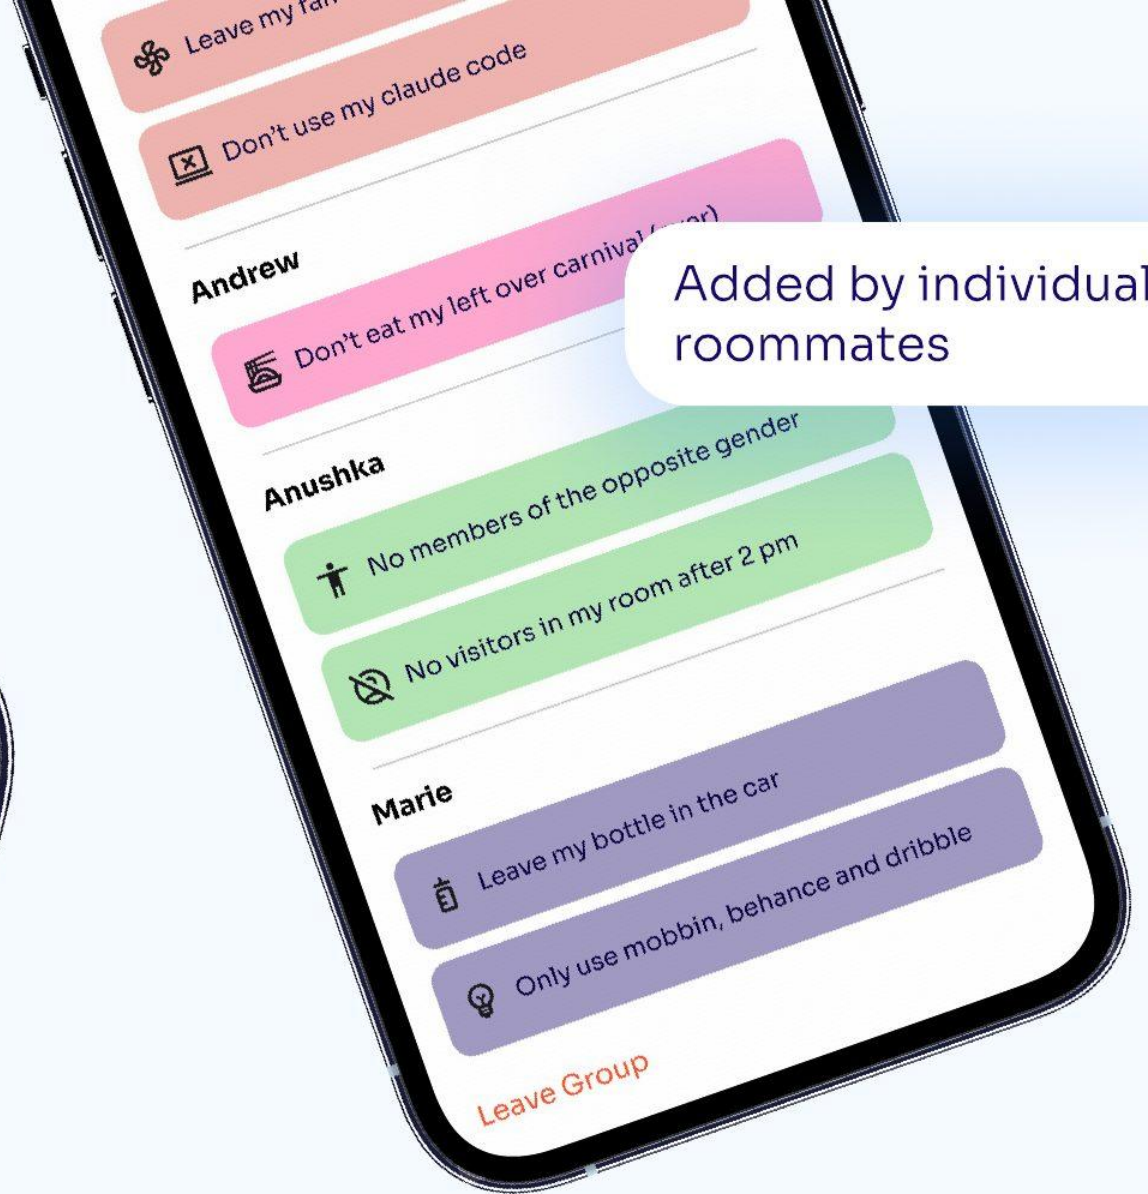

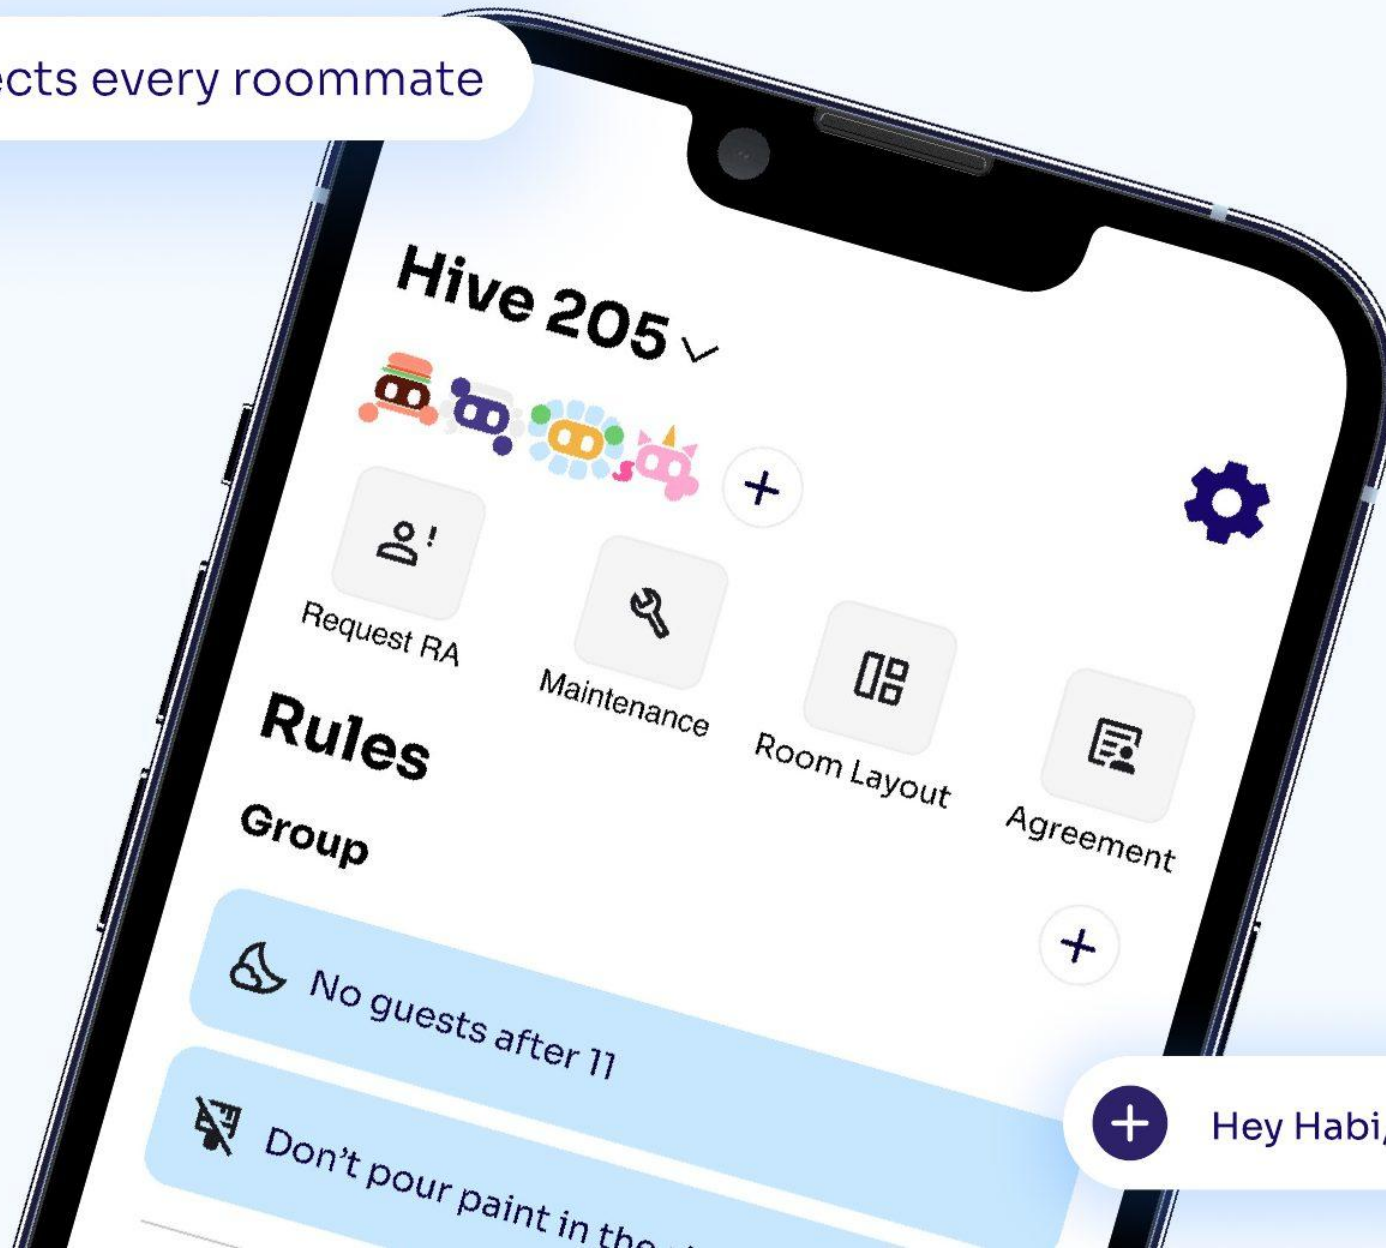

Solution

Lower the barrier of entry and make it easy, frictionless and less formal for RA's to see the evidence-based activities of your roommates. Set a temporary link so that they can view your room on your own terms.

Personal Rules

Pain Point

Roommates want a clear and visible way to set boundaries

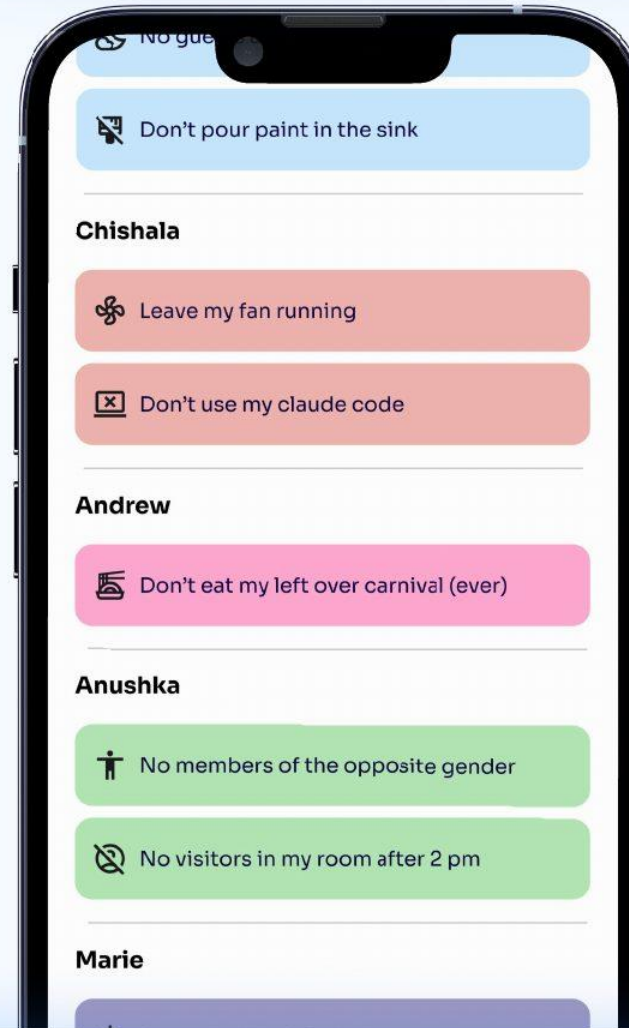

Interview Quote

“We [RAs] allow them to go off and try the new rules and roommate agreement that we put in place.”

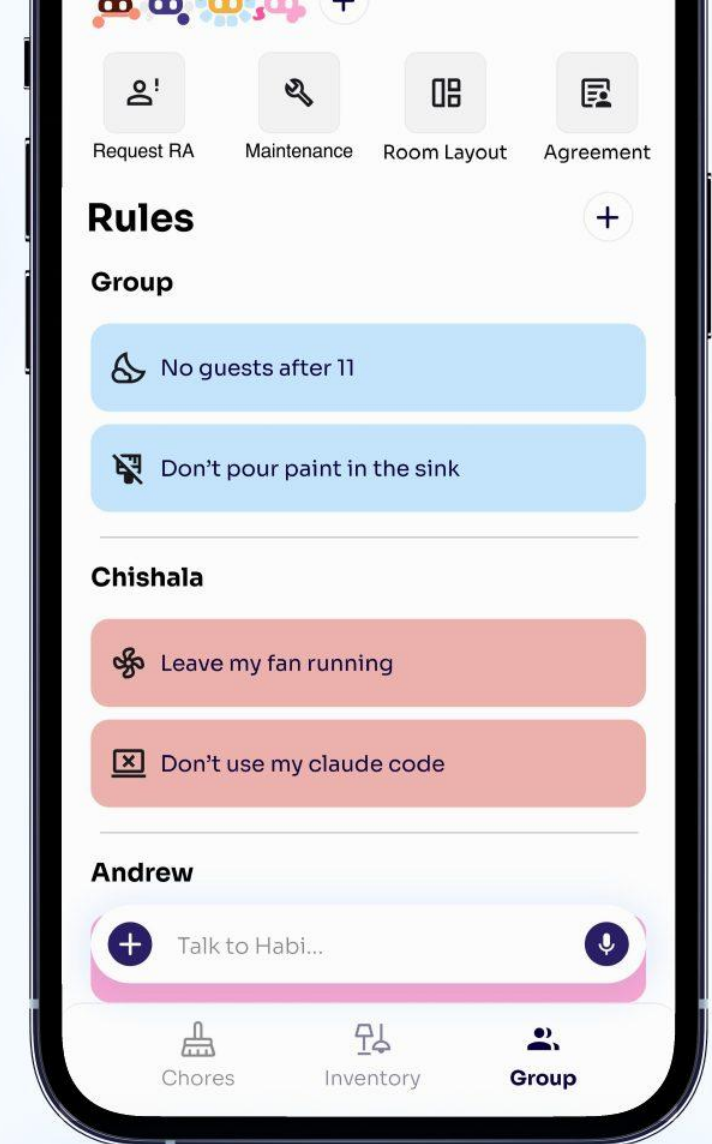

Solution

Establish the initial expectations so that roommates act proactively rather than reactively debating on unestablished boundaries.
